

Citrix Among Top Work Coordination Platforms

Company Makes Constellation ShortList of solutions designed to optimize the way work gets done

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. – February 12, 2020 – Employees today have more ways to connect and collaborate and flexibility and choice in the applications and devices they use to get work done than ever before. And according to Constellation Research, (NASDAQ:CTXS) is among the top platforms companies can use to unify everything they need to be productive into one seamless, intuitive experience. The company today announced that it has been named to the 2020 Constellation ShortList™ for Work Coordination Platforms, annual evaluation designed to help companies select the right technologies to drive their digital transformation goals.

“With the rise of digital communications and mass collaboration services such as team chat apps and enterprise social networks, today’s employees face new challenges trying to keep up engagement with an increasing number of colleagues and customers,” said Dion Hinchcliffe, Vice President and Principal Analyst, Constellation Research. “Work Coordination platforms aim to help alleviate these challenges by bringing structure, prioritization and accountability to work by helping employees better organize and optimize their productivity and effectiveness.”

The 2020 Constellation ShortList evaluated 20 vendors across 18 criteria, including:

- Administrative controls
- Analytics

- Application development
- Automation/workflow
- Business operations
- Business partner ecosystem
- Client access options
- Collaborative features
- Compliance
- Deployment options
- Ease of adoption and usage
- Licensing options
- Integration with other tools and business platforms
- Security
