

One Year On....

Businesses to miss out on top talent where remote work isn't made permanent

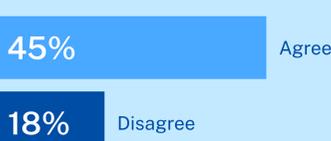

Do you think working from home will be more common after the Coronavirus crisis?

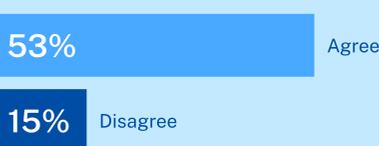

Businesses will lose out on talent if they don't offer flexible and remote working options*

If I were to change jobs, I would only accept a role which offered flexible and remote work options*

Flexible and remote working rights should be mandated by the Government*

Remote work during lockdown has improved work and personal lives

What impact do you think the pandemic has already had on your career?

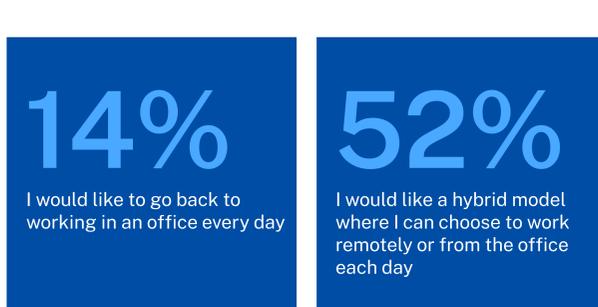

My personal life has been positively impacted by working from home over the past year

During the pandemic, many people have no longer had to commute to work. What have you used most of the time you have saved by not commuting for:

Which of the following best describes your attitude to remote work once the pandemic is over?

Company culture must adapt to better support employees' emotional wellbeing

Compared to this time last year, how has your mental wellbeing changed, in general

How important is a company culture that promotes mental and/or physical wellbeing to you?

Methodology:

The poll – commissioned by Citrix and conducted by OnePoll – questioned 3,750 office workers, asking about their views on their current working situation, company culture, and the impact of the pandemic on their wellbeing, career and work/life balance. In total 3,750 European office based workers in the UK, France, Germany, Switzerland, South Africa and the Netherlands were surveyed, between 02/02/21 and 15/02/21.

*Missing percentages refer to respondents who said "neither agree or disagree" or "not sure"
